English summary

Title: Physical consequences of partner violence to women and adolescent girls. The necessary response of the medical system

The international scientific community has both recognized partner violence against adult and adolescent women as an immense social problem. In Greece, though, dating violence has not been, as yet, recognized as a social problem. In this article the physical consequences of dating violence are presented as recorded in the literature review and in the only research done in Greece, by the author. Additionally, the necessity of the response of the medical system is discussed.
